INSECT DAMAGE GENERAL IN STATE

Virginia farmers and homeowners are continuing their battle against a bevy of bugs.

Arthur P. Norris, associate entomologist at VPI, says fall army worm outbreaks are expected to damage late corn and other late crops to some degree. To date there have been officially reported in the one southwestern Virginia county, but more trouble is expected.

Aphids, sawflies, and green June beetle adults are troublesome on grapes and ripening peaches. Potato leafhoppers, tarnished plant bugs, chinch bugs, cutworms, grasshoppers and small fruit insects are also reported in the state. Farmers are advised to be on the lookout for the pests and to apply controls as needed.

Locust leaf-miner damage to black locust trees is general throughout the state. Also, reports of the Japanese beetle continue, but this pest seems to be definitely on the down-grade this year.

Green peach aphids, tobacco flea beetles, horseworms, and grasshoppers are currently posing a serious threat to tobacco in Virginia. These pests will all have to be controlled. Stink bug damage is probably quite general.

Bagworms and spider mites continue as the outstanding pests of ornamental plants.

Silverfish and cigarette beetle infestations are being reported by homeowners.

Final Touches Are Made For School Opening

Finishing touches are being put on preparations for the opening of public schools in Appomattox Co. next Thursday. Biggist problem faced here has been an effort to round out a faculty at the Appomattox High School, where there were more vacancies than usual for this session. Schools will open on schedule, however, and the school board is hoping for last-minute success in filling the vacancies.

A meeting of cafeteria managers was held this week to set up the operation of these facilities. Mrs. S. A. Lawson will manage the cafeteria at the local Elementary school and Mrs. A. A. Babcock will manage the cafeteria at the local high school. Both will be operated by the school board, rather than the P.-T. A.

Meetings of teachers are scheduled for next Wednesday. A number of teachers have already arrived here after their summer vacations.

Police Head Gives Warning On Traffic

Leeking with apprehension towards the first three-day week-end holiday of the year, Colonel C. W. Woodson, Jr., Superintendent of State Police and Chairman of the Governor's Highway Safety Committee, today sounded a warning of abnormally dangerous traffic conditions which are certain to prevail over the Labor Day holiday.

"For many people," he said, "it will be the last fling of summer and all drivers should be prepared for heavier traffic than is generally encountered on a summer week-end. Last year the holiday meant death in traffic for 15 people in Virginia and 438 throughout the nation. Virginia's score for the entire month of September seared to a tragic 113."

"While a general relaxation over a holiday is understandable," he continued, "people who drive in today's traffic simply must understand that the highway is no place for it, and that driving is a deadly serious business. We should realize that eternal vigilance must also be the price of safety wher we drive and walk.

In commenting on the dangers peculiar to such an occasion, Col. Woodson noted, drinking is always a predominant factor, that people attempt too much distance in too little time and that the exhausted or sleepy driver returning home after a strenuous week-end presents a menace that is becoming more and more apparent. "It is not enough today to drive carefully ourselves," he observed, "for we must be ever alert for the driver who doesn't and who car kill just as dead as if the innocent victim were at fault. An occasion such as this week-end calls for the utmost in careful driving and self-control."

In line with the policy of the State Police, he stated tie highways will be heavily patrolled and that the use of radar as an enforcement tool will continue unabated.

MARSHALL-CALDWELL ANNUAL REUNION

Descendants and their families of the Marshall - Caldwell relationship will hold their annual reunion on Sunday, Sept. 2, at the home of the late Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Marshall near Spout Spring. Come, and bring your friends and a picnic basket and have a good time. Specia entertainment is planned.

State Senator Chas. T. Moses and Delegate John B. Boatwright, representatives of Appomattox County in the State Legislature, are taking prominent roles during the current Special Session of the General Assembly. The session is taking a recess over the Labor Day weekend, after some 100 bills were introduced by the membership, aimed at the Virginia school crisis brought on by the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision.

While the legislators were back home for the five-day recess, there was speculation as to whether or not the votes were available to put over the program offered by Gov. Thomas B. Stanley. While there was virtually solid feeling among the legislators in favor of a continuance of school segregation, the nearly 100 bills offered a variety of approaches. Chief proposal of the Stanley program is to withhold state funds from any locality in which integration takes place. This would likely bring on closing of public schools in that locality.

Sen. Moses, an outspoken advocate of continued segregation, is hopeful that the Stanley program will muster enough votes to pass. Senator Moses is understood to be supporting the Stanley program, but would like to make it just as strong as possible so as to avoid integration anywhere in Virginia. He has looked with favor upon a proposal submitted by Senator Edward O. McCue, of Charlottesville.

Delegate Boatwright is another strong advocate of segregation, and is patron of several of the bills offered.

Veteran legislators are of the belief that ere the special session concludes, a lot of compromises may be made to work out, before final laws are enacted.

Meanwhile, schools in Virginia are set to start the new session, on the traditional segregated basis.

Local Schools Can't Operate Without Use of State Funds

In conection with the special session of the General Assembly now in progress, available figures indicate that public schools in Appomattox could not operate without state funds. The latest available figures show the proportionate share of the cost of Appomattox County schools by state, federal and local funds:

State funds: $210,190, or 57%
Federal funds: $4,586, or 1%
Local funds: $155,811, or 42%

Senator Byrd Backs Stanley's School Bill

Senator Harry Flood Byrd spoke last Saturday at the annual apple-growers' picnic at Berryville, and sounded a clarion call to arms to Virginians in the face of current state and national problems. He addressed some 2,000 at the outing, and gave strong endorsement to the general objectives of the legislative program laid before the Assembly by Governor Thomas B. Stanley. He also severely criticized several items in the record of the Eisenhower Administration.

Senator Byrd spoke out strongly at Mr. Eisenhower's proposals for increased foreign aid. He also condemned the civil rights program backed by the President, which was blocked in Congress by the delaying tactics of Southern Democrats in the House and Senate.

Byrd recalled that he had fought against civil rights measures proposed by Presidents Roosevelt and Truman, but said the Eisenhower program was the worst yet.

One of its worst features, he said, is that "all litigation (in civil rights matters) would be taken away from the state courts and given on to the federal courts." Applied to the school situation, this means that "Southerners could be fined and jailed by federal judges . . . and be denied the right by trial by their peers," he said. Byrd cited several Supreme Court decisions tending to concentration of more and more power in Washington. "If this continues, the result will be totalitarian government—that means dictatorship."
